Erie's Growing Population Biggest Driver for Growth in Business Demand

The following are excerpts from the 8/2/13 Boulder County Business Report:

If you build the housing, the businesses will come.

That's the approach the town of Erie is taking as housing growth in the community that straddles the Boulder and Weld county lines continues to boom.

Frank Banta, who is developing the Boulder Valley Velodrome in Erie along with Doug Emerson, owner of Boulder's University Cycles bike shop, said the decision to build in Erie was a relatively easy one. The population is booming and young. Land is less expensive than in other cities in Boulder County. The town has easy access to Interstate 25 and thus easy access from Denver and Fort Collins as well as Boulder County. Besides, Banta said, Erie wanted his business.

"The Town of Erie was much more receptive through the development process," said Banta, who expects his 250-meter bike track to be open for riding in a couple months and completely finished sometime next year. "They have a welcoming attitude. They want to grow."
